THE GEO. F. OTTE CO., 131 & 133 W. 4th St., Cincinnati, O.

HIGHLAND COUNTY, OHIO. By authority derived from the Judge of Probate Court of said County officially, hearing date the 5th day of April, 1893, and after being duly sworn according to law, we. A. E. Hough and O F. Horst, as Inspectors, without previous notice or intimation to the County Treasurer, or any other person, of such intention, did forthwith enter into the County Treasury, and proceeded immediately to count the moneys therein, and inspect the Books, Records and Vouchers thereof, together with all other property which should be in the custody of the Treasurer, and made an examination of the same, including all records, books, accounts and vouchers in said office. In compliance with the law requiring certificates of such examination, we herewith certify that one thousand eight hundred and seventy seven dollars and eighty-two cents was the exact amount of money so found and counted in the County Treasury, and that the statement annexed, which agrees with the books of the Auditor, presents the exact balances and over payments in each fund, and of property then in the custody of the Treasurer; and that said records, books, accounts and vouchers have been well and faithfully kept.

Respectfully submitted,

A E Houser,

April 12th, 1893.

A E Hough, O. F. Horst.

THE BOOK OF PROVERBS .- Its Form. The Book of Proverbs is written in poetical form. But there is quite a variety in the style. The Introduction (chaps. 1-9), the Praise of Wisdom, is written in the parallelism which dis-tinguishes Hebrew poetry, but is not so much proverbial as lyric, or didactic poem, rising to a more spiritual height than the other portions. The proverbs of the next section (chaps, 10-22) are, with a single exception, in the form of a distich, or an epigram of two clauses, "the second answering or otherwise completing the thought of the first." Often they are the two parts of a comparison. This portion is often called an Anthology, i. e., a garland of flow-ers, like the Greek anthology, a collection of ancient Greek epigrams. The series of proverbs in 15:8 to 15:11 is especially characterized by its use of the name Jehovah (Lord in the old version). A series of five groups of Numerical Proverbs is found in 30:15-31. The Praise of a Virtuous Woman, 31:10-31, is an Alphabetical Acrostic.

ITS CHARACTER.-The Book of Proverbs belongs to what modern critics call the wisdom literature, including Proverbs, Job, Ecclesiastes and Solomon's Song. It approaches human things and things divine from quite another side than the Prophets or the Psalms. It is the philosophy of practi-cal life. It is the sign to us that the Bible does not despise common sense and discretion. It impresses upon us in the most forcible manner the value of intelligence and prudence and of a good education. Above all, it insists over and over again upon the doctrine that goodness is wisdom, and that wicked-ness and vice are folly. The Book of Proverbs is the best statesman's mannal that was ever written. An adherence to the political economy and spirit of that collection of apothegms and essays would do more to eradicate from a people the causes of extrava-gance, debasement and ruin, than all the contributions to political economy of Say, Smith, Malthus and Chalmers together. The book, as a whole, may be called the book of divine common sense; that is, a book of instruction concerning behavior in the common transactions of life, in which the thought of God and of His continual presence holds the chief place. While no Christian the poetic foregle of Christ in the great monologue of Wisdom in chapter 8," yet other parts of the book furnish abundant justification of that type of Christianity which accepts but does not dwell on forms, so sceepts but does not diversified applications of bent is it upon moral applications. the religious principle. They show that the fear of the Lord is quite compatible with a deep interest in average human life and human nature. It charges us not to love God less, but man

AUTHOR.-A large number of the proverbs are evidently by Solomon, as the inscriptions state. But this does not exclude the idea that Solomon may have gathered much from previous wisdom. The human race did not exist at least 3,000 years before his time without coining many proverbs. So Shakespeare used tales and dramas that had existed before his day, and then made them his own. Nor would it be strange if to the earlier collection of Solomon other proverbs had been added, just as the new Webster's dictionary that now lies before me contains a large amount of matter Webster never saw, and yet it rightly announces itself as the authentic, unabridged Webster's revised and enlarged. Some of the latter portions were gathered by Hezekiah, and other sections were added still later, as the book itself says.

DATE .- Solomon lived about 1000 B. C., but his proverbs may have been gathered into a book some time after his death; Delitzsch thinks in the time of Jehoshaphat (900 B. C.). Others place it later. Hezekiah's collection be-longs to 700 B. C., and the last portions may be as late as the times after the exile, 450 B. C. or later.

PRACTICAL BUGGESTIONS.

Wisdom's voice is heard where it is most needed, among the daily labors and temptations of life.

The greater part of what we enjoy and of what we suffer is put in our own God does not leave anyone without invitations and warnings.

God's warnings are the fruit of wis-dom and love. The fire bell is not rung that men may perish in the flames, but that they may escape.

Those that refuse to listen at length become deaf to the warning, as morning alarm soon ceases to awaken one who takes no notice of its call.

"The prosperity of the foolish is a calamitous thing. (1) It results in ruin to other people—often their temporal, still more often their spiritual ruin. (2) It ends in their own destruction.
